Setting the Record Straight

In its Jan. 11 editions, in a story about CIA ties with local police, The Star reported, "The documents included testimonial letters praising the CIA from several area police chiefs, notably former D.C. Chief Jerry V. Wilson, who has repeatedly denied that he had any direct knowledge of CIA involvement with his department."

When Wilson was police chief, officials of the department did acknowledge to City Council officials that the CIA provided some training to local police.

The story should have said that Wilson repeatedly declined to discuss with reporters from The Star specific details about CIA involvement with local police. The Star regrets the error.
